5. EVALUATE SUBJECT'S CHARACTER, RELIABILITY AND SECURITY, CITING EVIDENCE WHERE POSSIBLE.
1. Character: Subject does not select her friends and acquaintances, either from the social or political/ideological point of view, very carefully. Section XI, 5.

3. Security: She has proven to be reasonably security conscious, however, her intimate relationship with LINLUCK, [REDACTED] and possible with others constitute potential security hazards. She is discreet in her phone conversations with the case officer, and in the mechanics of making meetings. She sometimes turns down meeting places suggested by the case officer, saying that some of her acquaintances visit the place or the area suggested, or that Soviet and/or Satellite personnel are believed to visit the place or area. The greatest potential security hazard, the writer believes, is the type of situation, sexual and/or emotional involvement, which she might allow herself to become involved in.

Section XI, 6.

2. In an effort to pave the way for LINLUCK's return to Mexico, she has interceded with various Mexican Government officials, and caused certain press articles in his defense to be published. This activity, however, was carried on with the knowledge and approval of KUBARK personnel. She provided copies of letters written, and received from LINLUCK, clippings from the press, and summaries of her conversations with Mexican Government personnel.

No recognition signals, either unnumbered or numbered, have been established, but this can be done should the need arise during further liaison.
SECTION XVI		MISCELLANEOUS OPERATIONAL DATA AND REMARKS
In the event possible, Subject should be acquainted frequently with regard to her contacts and acquaintances, necessarily for operational reasons, but also to assist her in avoiding potential pitfalls.
